From the Southern Literary Messenger. Character of Washington.

The following obituary of Washington appeared in a London newspaper, in January, 1800, few weeks after his death, I should like to know who its author was. For finished elegance, and for justness of portraiture, it has never been surpassed, if ever equalled, by any other sketch of our matchless countryman. Could it have been an Englishman, who so justly appreciated, Englisman, who was he? I can think of no one then living in Great Britain, (Burke had died nearly four years before,) who had at once a heart, a mind, and a pen for such work; except with warm expressions of adm ration: Erskine. Fox had the heart, mind, and tongue for it perhaps; but not the pen. It is found in Kingston's Life of Washington, a modest and lished at Baltimore in 1813. Kingston does not tell the name of the London newspaper.

This masterly portrait should be laid on every America. The traits which it describes, and truly attributes to Washington, are traits of which the frequent contemplation would do more relief of the sufferers at Norfolk and Portsmouth. than a thousand lectures to make nobly useful M.

"The melancholy account of the death of Gen. Washington was brought by a vessel from Balti-more, which has arrived off Dover. "General Woshington was, we believe, in his 68th year. The height of his person was about five teet eleven; his chest tull; and his limbs, though rather slender, well shaped and muscular. His head was rather small; in which respect he resembled the make of a great number of his countrymen. His eyes were of a light grey color; and in proportion to the length of his face, his nose was long. Mr. Steward, the eminent portrait painter, used to say, there were features in his face totally different from what he had observed in that of any other human being, the sockets of the eyes, for instance, were larger than what he ever met with before, and the upper part of his nose broader. All his features, ne observed, were indicative of the strongest passions; yet, like Socrates, his judgment and great | Norfolk, Portsmonth, and Gosport. self-command have always made him appear a A gentleman from Newark reported that $1,-man of a different cast in the eyes of the world. 500 have been raised in that city, and desired He always spoke with great diffidence, and sometimes hesitated for a word; but it was always to find one particularly well adapted to his meaning. His tauguage was manly and expressive. At levee, his discourse with strangers turned principally upon the subject of America; and if they had been through any remarkable places, his conversation was free and particularly interesting; for he was intimately acquainted with every part of the country. He was much more open and free in his behavior at levee than in private; and in company of ladies still more so han when solely with men.

Few persons ever found themselves for the first time in the presence of General Washington, without being impressed with a certain degree veneration and awe; nor did those emotions sub side in a closer acquaintance; on the contrary his person and deportment were such as rather ed to augment them. The hard service he had seen, the important and laborious offices he had filled, gave a kind of austerity to countenance, and a reserve to his manners; yet he was the kindest husband, the most humane master, the steadiest friend.

The whole range of history does not present to our view a character upon which we can dwell with such entire and unmixed admiration. The long life of General Washington is not stained by a single blot. He was indeed a man of such rare endowments, and such fortunate temperament, that every action he performed was equally exempted from the charge of vice or weakness. Whatever he said or did or wrote, was stamped with a striking and peculiar propriety. His qualities were so happily blended, and so nicely harmonized, that the result was a great and perfect whole. The powers of his mind, and the isposition of his heart, were admirably suited to each other. It was the union of the most perfect prudence with the most consummate me ration. His views, though large and liberal, were never extravagant; his virtues, though comprehensive and beneficent, were discriminatudicious, and practicable

Yet his character, though regular and uniform, possessed none of the littleness which may someimes belong to these descriptions of men. It ormed a majestic pile, the effect of which was not impaired, but improved by order and symmetry. There was nothing in the dazzle by wilderness, or surprise by eccentricity. It was of a higher species of moral beauty. It contained taste, incapable of change from the varying accidents of manners, opinions, and times. General Washington was not the idol of a day, but the

Placid in circumstances of the most trying difficulty at the commencement of the American contest, he accepted that situation which was pre-eminent in danger and responsibility. His perseverance overcame every obstacle; his moderation conciliated every opposition; his genius supplied every resource; his enlarged view could plan, revise, and improve, every branch of civil and military operation. He had the superior courage which can act or forbear to act, as true policy dictates, careless of the reproaches of ignorance—either in power or out of power. He knew how to conquer by waiting, in loguy, for the moment of victory; and he merited true praise by despising undeserved censure. In the most arduous moments of the contest, his prudent firmness proved the salvation of the cause which he supported. His conduct was, on all occasions, guided by the most pure disinterestedness. Far superior to low and grovelling motives, his seemed even to be uninfluenced by that ambition, which has justly been called the instinct of great souls. He acted even, as if his country's welfare, and that alone, was the moving spring. His excellent mind needed not even stimulus of ambition, or the prospect of fame. Glory was but a secondary prospect of fame. Glory was but a secondary consideration. He performed great actions, he persevered in a course of laborous utility, with an equanimity that neither sought distinction, nor was flattered by it. His reward was in the inbiassed choice of his countrymen, his exercise of it was agreeable to the purity of its origin. As he had neither solicited nor usurped domini he had neither to contend with the oppositions of rivals, nor the revenge of enemies. As his aument was mild and gentle; it was beneficent and liberal; it was wise and just. His prudent ad ministration consolidated and enlarged the second secon ambition and the criminal thirst of power, of which so many instances occur around us, to find a character whom it is honorable to admire, and women and girls. The order to march caused a A magistrate, for its happiness. His glories were never sullied by those excesses, into which the highest qualities are apt to degenerate. With the greatest virtues, he was exempt from the corresponding vices. He was a man in whom the elements were so mixed that Nature with the clements were so mixed that Nature with the thus threatens. the elements were so mixed, that Nature might | he thus threatens: have stood up to all the world," and owned him as her work. From Utah. We have received files of the Deseret News The News hoists the name of Hon. and tinsel ornaments. It was not the model cried by the fashion and the circumstance; its excellence was adapted to the true and just moral on the first Monday of August. The emigration to California had commenced to pass torough Great Salt Lake City, but the News thinks it will be very light this year. The weather since the latter part of May had been very warm, making the country dry and hot and the streams very low, thus causing the loss of much of the small portion of grain and vegetables left by the grass-hoppers. The coping-stone is laid upon three-eighths of the wall around Temple Block, and a large dwelling house for President Brigham Young was progressing rapidly.

The Fourth of July was celebrated in Great Salt Lake City with great parade, firing of cau-non, and making of speeches. The following are some of the sentiments proposed: President Franklin Pierce: May he live till his popularity is equal to his virtues; and may no future President of the United States do any more harm or less good. The Governor of Utah: He is as he was, and as he is so may he ever be. The Territory of Utah: The hub of the great wheel of creation; "spin away, gals," and clothe the heralds of holiness in homespun. Descret forever: Her own Governor, her own religion, her own legion, and her own "peculiar institutions," instead of office-hoppers, and clodhoppers, and grass-hoppers.

Liberty of conscience: The bulwark of every government. Wee to the nation that muzzles it. an equanimity that neither sought assinction, nor was flattered by it. His reward was in the consciousness of his own rectitude, and in the success of his patriotic efforts.

> I Sick Headache Romedy .- A remedy for the sick headache, which has been recently offered to the public, is attracting great attention, not only by reason of the very satisfactory testimonials to its efficacy which have been volunteered by many who have been benefited by it, but also because there are so great a number of people who are af-dicted with the distressing complaint, for which no medicine has before been made public. Dr. Eastman, who discovered the efficacy of his "remedy," is a physician in this city, in high standing, with a large practice. He is a physician in whom great confidence is placed; and we do not wonder that his remedy for a very common disease, which has been so long needed, has attracted the attention of all sufferers from headache who have heard of it From our own knowledge of Dr. Eastman's char acter and practice, we have no doubt that the med cine deserves the favor it receives, and that it will prove to be a great benefit to all who may give it a trial.—Lynn News, December 23, 1853. ENGLISH AND FRENCH BOARDING | TO LOVERS OF THE FRENCH LANGUAGE THE Advertiser, a Frenchman and gradspecifully offers his services as a teacher of his native tongue to Schools, Classes, and Private Pupils of this city and vicinity. The system he follows to facilitate the acquisition of the French Language, unites in due propertion theory and practice; by which are avoided the difficulties the student often meets with an pursuing one of the many theoretical grammars, not sufficiently show-ing the idiomatical part of the language, or a prac-tical one, in which the necessary grammatical rules, if not entirely, at least far too much, are neglected. In following these theoretical grammars, the student must have experienced that after having devoted a long time to the mere me-morizing of sentences, he find himself in posses-sion of a number of set phrases, valuable it is true, but from which, destitute of landmarks, the slightest deviation must lead him into unknown regions.

The advertiser feels confident in the assertion that the pupil, in adopting his method, may, with a little effort, after a course of forty right lessons, understand and speak the French, and find the as sistance of a teacher not necessary in the further prosecution of the studies of that language. Instruction in Pencil Drawing, Pasiel Painting and Penmanship, can also be had from the adver-
